Note

ANIMA (2014) is a one-act ballet, produced and premiered on 12 April 2014, at KMATOB-FEST, Kyiv Municipal Academic Theatre of Opera and Ballet (KMATOB), Kyiv, Ukraine. Choreography: Artem Hordieiev / LITSO Dance Company. The subject of my diploma thesis on the choreographic method (2015).

Description

ANIMA was rehearsed in Kyiv in February and March 2014, while people were shot on Maidan and Crimea was annexed. It premiered on 12 April, the day the war began in Donbas. A man, a hero, is tested. He thinks matter is the only limit. He does not know he is already looking for light. Under stress and death, the body is the last free country he owns.

COLLARS AND CUFFS (2015) - site-specific performance in the museum rooms. Produced and premiered 18 May 2015, Mikhail Bulgakov Literary Memorial Museum, Andriivskyi Descent 13, Kyiv, Ukraine. Concept, choreography and direction: Artem Hordieiev. Music: Victoria Poleva. Costumes: Fedir Vozianov.

Description

Kyiv, 1918. The city changes hands again and again. Shells fall outside. In Bulgakov's house, three women wait and do not know what comes next. In Elena's bedroom, they breathe freely. Not for long. The shadow of Mikhail, the doctor, steps out of his laboratory, through the white wardrobe. The audience stands in the rooms, too close, like Bolshevik occupiers who came in uninvited.

Note

0,10 - 100 (2015) - site-specific performance, 10 min. Produced and premiered 18 March 2015, National Academy of Fine Arts and Architecture (former Kyiv Art Institute, where Kazimir Malevich taught 1928–1930), Kyiv, Ukraine. Music: Amon Tobin. Costumes Vozianov.

Description

One hundred years after the Black Square, the academy from which the Soviet power purged Malevich in 1930 returns his portrait to the row of its founders. Under arrest, the artist called himself Ukrainian. The composition was built around the original of his suprematist painting and the utilitarian meaning of his movement. A transformation one hundred years long.

PASSIONS ACCORDING TO TARAS (2013) — oratorio for choir, orchestra, and dance on poems by Taras Shev

Description

The last year before the revolution in Ukraine. A nation rereads its main poet to ask: where are we going? One hero goes against the common movement, working improvisation that does not obey the general pattern of the movement. He looks for freedom inside the system. I created and performed this solo, researching what improvisation can do against fixed structure in theater.

Abstract:

ICARE is an evening in two parts. The first is Igor Markevitch's L'Envol d'Icare (1932), a score written for Serge Lifar and never staged as a ballet. Lifar could not bring his rhythm to it. I come back to it. Part one holds the frame of the research. Part two is born in the field, with the creative team: composer, designer, dramaturg, dancers. My question: can the hard vertical of a production carry the horizontal of co-creation? Eight months, five to seven dancers.

Project Description:

A Greek myth and its embodiment today. How should a myth be read? Where is the body in it? What can choreography do in theatre that no other art can?

Igor Markevitch wrote L'Envol d'Icare in 1932 for Serge Lifar. Lifar refused: he could not bring his rhythm into accord with the score. In 1935 he danced his own Icare without music, on a rhythm entirely his own. The score has never been staged. Both were born in Kyiv, and Kyiv formed me too. Icarus escapes the tyrant and refuses his father's instructions. But can he pass through the sun, or become it, instead of falling? Occupied France, 1943: Matisse cut his Icare from paper, a red heart in a black body like night. A sun inside the infinity of a human being.

War. The moment a person risks everything and feels fully alive. A wounded soldier who could stay home and keeps going back to the front. A woman buying expensive cosmetics after a sleepless night under shells. Filling in this form, I lost a fourth friend in a war Russia started. Can I speak as an artist now, and about what? How does an artistic voice work when you lose your mother tongue, country, home, space for art, familiar people?

I work with the composer's own version for two pianos and three percussion: seven movements, 27 minutes. Bartók heard it; it is believed to have shaped his Sonata for two pianos and percussion. For nineteen years I worked inside the hardest vertical there is: live broadcasts, state ceremonies, arenas of ten thousand. Since 2013 I have practised the inverse: the phenomenology of the working field. The field already knows what the group has to create. My work is to take that knowledge out of the space. Not only dancers: composer, designer, dramaturg, the whole production enter the same field. ICARE puts both strategies inside one evening. Part one holds the structure. Part two is born in the field, in research. K3 is where the method can be extended and tested. Eight months is the most honest horizon.

Short biography:

Artem Hordieiev is a Ukrainian choreographer and director. He came into dance through sport: gymnastics, folk dance, then ballroom, where he became bronze medallist of the World Cup 2005.

At 18 the television industry took him. Ukrainian prime time, live broadcasts, an audience of millions. At the same time he trained in classical ballet every morning in Kyiv, to work in an opera and ballet theatre. For ten years he lived in two bodies: one for the camera, one for the ballet stage.

He danced in Denys Matvienko's company in Ukraine and Europe. He directed large entertainment formats in Ukraine, Kazakhstan, Tajikistan and, until 2015, Russia. At 30, in 2018, he ended his career as a dancer. He had directed and choreographed for years, but for television. He wanted the theatre. In Ukraine, there was no institutional support for a choreographer to work there permanently.

His subject is the human spirit under pressure: freedom, identity and maturity tested by war, risk of death, loss, different forms of dictatorship. He did not choose this subject. His practice was formed inside revolution and war: Ukraine, Central Asia, Russia, Senegal.

His method comes from the phenomenology of the working field, adapted to dramaturgy and the stage. He wrote his diploma thesis on it and has been developing it since.

In 2013, he founded LITSO Dance Company in Kyiv, today Newspaper Birds Ballet. He works with the producer Tetiana Hordieieva. He is based in France and works across Europe.

Remarks:

Score and rights. L'Envol d'Icare exists in the composer's own version for two pianos and three percussion, and this is the version I want to work with. The manuscript is held in the Fonds Igor Markevitch. Clearing the rights and the performance material is part of the eight months.

Team. I work with the producer Tetiana Hordieieva. She takes part in the process itself and would be open to co-production conversations.

Languages. My working language is English at a simple conversational level. I understand more than I speak. If invited, I will bring it up to a working level before the residency starts.

Accessibility. No specific needs.

Material. A recording of Markevitch's score in the version for five players, the sound I plan to work with: <https://youtu.be/mCAXXyfZjOU>
